

Through the aid of the personnel officer, Muhammad Reza, seven people of the 700-man labor force, with the expectation of doing more tomorrow: he accepted that I needed at least 50.

Of the 700, 600 are men, 100 are women, and 110 children under 17. The children earn about 5 tomans a day; the women, 5-6 tomans; the men from 6 to 40. Of the lot, only 10 are Zoroastrian. Twenty people work in the office. The annual turn-over is 20-30 people. Of the total labor force, maybe 50 came here from other factories; most were previously farmers. Most live in Yazd; none come from further than 6 kilometers away; but within those 6 kilometers about 200 come from villages, e.g. Morianabad, Rahmatabad, Ahrigarm, Husseinabad, Naimabad, Saidrabad, Mehtabad. (all skewed to this side of Yazd. The factory has a school and 40% of the people have gotten their education from it; another twenty studied outside (Idhara?) (?).

Karshane Derakhshan is ~~the~~ about 37 years old; was the 2nd factory to be opened in Yazd; opened by Herati (Muslim), Aidun (Zoroastrian) and now a larger company. Derakhshan and Afshar (10 years old) are the only two wool factories; most Yazd textile mills make cotton cloth (naki). To the east of Yazd are no textile mills; Kirman had one, Khorshid but it has closed; Zahedan, Bandar Abbas have none. Isfahan had the first mill; Tabriz, Teheran, have many; Shiraz some.

Although there has always been carpet weaving in Yazd, this industry grew as the work for manual cloth weaving declined due to the introduction of mechanized factories.

Services introduced to Yazd: the first kitchen was the piece of Pahlavi between the Bank-e-Melli and the Farmandari. Kh. Pahlavi is 35-40 years old but alphabetized only about 15 years ago; Kh. Shah is 30 years old. Electricity has been available for about 35 years; piped water for about 5-6 years.

The Questionnaire I tested was primarily a census style one with only a few attitude questions at the end; these latter did not have much useful response, and I decided to drop them for the coming interviewees. The question whether the interviewee had ever given money to hold a rosa-xane (which is the way it came out in Persian) proved to be mis-informed on my part: the response was 'of course, I am a Muslim'; and the response to 'on what occasions', was to many rosas, i.e. to each one, 5 or 7 tomans. The idea that one man would throw a rosa, the obviously, possible, apparently is not common enough to evoke the indexical response I wanted. Secondly, the question, what job the interviewee would prefer for his son, was first countered by the normal, will he's only in school now, or God knows best, etc.; and then an unsatisfactory response—this question has to be done with a series of questions, incl. such things as would you want him to be what you are, etc. The most frequent response however was mohandess (engineer) tho this was at the encouragement of Mad. Reza, the personnel manager who helped me explain the question. The question whether Yazd has changed and how in the last 20 years got no negative responses, and most even managed to throw in a thanks to the Shah; roads, better housing, more jobs, doubling of the size of the city. The question whether they had a relative who was a Bahai was not badly received, but there were no positive responses. The question as to what in the interviewee's opinion the difference is between Zoroastrianism and Islam generally gained an I don't know nod towards Zoroastrianism, and an Islam is best or my religion is Islam answer. Given the setting in the personnel manager's office with one or two other people present, more touchy questions were avoided, esp. those I had drawn up specially for Zoroastrians.

Anaris - Sayyid Mhd. Reza says that many men come to Yazd from Ahar to get wives as well as work; the sedagh is much lower here - there are few girls there for some reason.

20-30 Bahais says Yazdizeni (ask A.K.)

note while most workers work 8 hrs + some overtime varying office workers work from 8am to 1pm (5 hrs) giving them a time advantage in holding another job;
then the ex-bazaar clerk ~~still works~~ has an interest in a bazaar shop; A.K. has 2 other jobs;

Q should be added to the questionnaire: another job?
